

Discover how Silicea helped 45 year old hotel specialist Janine Wagner win the fight against cellulite and weak connective tissue:

"Even when I was only 20 years old I didn't like what I saw in the mirror. A picture taken during a holiday really threw me for a loop: That young woman on the beach – with the small dimples in her thighs – that was supposed to be me? I was keeping an excellent diet, had a thin body, exercised regularly, and still there were already signs of what I was to see as my greatest physical flaw over the next years. While friends my age joked about cellulite, I stopped showing even my legs in public.

In my early twenties, I secretly tried all kinds of products to fight cellulite. I took dietary supplements, massaged my problem zones with lotions, subjected my body to rubdowns with massage gloves and other contraptions – spending terrific amounts of money. All to no avail. Worse still: After being pregnant with my son Mark, my stomach also lost shape. Finally, at 40, my upper arms started getting flabby, and because of the spider veins on my legs and a few pounds too many on my hips I started wearing pants only, both at work and at home.

When I consulted my doctor, he simply shrugged and said: "That's something you'll just have to live with. You have weak connective tissue. The only thing you can do is lead a healthy life and get a lot of physical exercise. In your case it might also help if you lost some weight. And should those spider veins on your legs develop into serious varicose veins, we might have to do some minor surgery. To prevent varicose veins from developing, you might consider wearing compression stockings."

When I left his office, I felt devastated: I was 40 years old, overweight, and was supposed to wear compression stockings from now on! For a long time, sex with my husband had already been something I insisted on doing in the dark. Now just imagine me taking off my compression stockings before getting into bed! To me, this was the ultimate turn-off. But it would be another few years before the situation changed.

Two years ago my son told me "Mom, you need to get into the internet", and gave me his old PC. There, I discovered a whole new world. I talked to people in forums, collected valuable tips and discovered a wealth of new information on cellulite. Once again I went on an anti-cellulite shopping tour – well-prepared by tips from my internet acquaintances – and once again suffered many a disappointment, as I had when I was 20, until I came across a tip by a woman in a forum who reported that Original Silicea Balsam combined with physical exercise had produced sensational results.

I then found many other users in the Internet who were impressed by the tissue-strengthening silicon gel. Still, I was reluctant to believe what I read. I looked up information on the vital trace element silicon and found a great deal of scientific evidence for the positive influence of this substance on human health. So I started running on a regular basis and took a dose of Original Silicea Balsam every day.

I do admit, when nothing dramatic had happened after three weeks, I was disappointed. I seriously considered giving up.

But after about six weeks I did notice a change: The withered, sallow skin of my face looked brighter and smoother and felt softer. And even better: The skin along buttocks, thighs, stomach and arms was becoming increasingly firmer. I knew this could not only be attributed to my running exercises, for at the age of twenty I had also exercised intensively and still had cellulite on my buttocks and legs. My mind was made up: I was definitely going to keep up my daily ration of Original Silicea Balsam.

Today, at 45, I feel good in my skin. I have almost reached my personal weight loss goal and am no longer afraid to go to the public swimming-pool – my confidence has experienced such a tremendous boost that two months ago I even went out and bought myself the tiniest of bikinis. Sex is no longer an activity that requires the lights to be switched off. Last week my husband actually brought me red roses – something he hasn't done for years.

I am convinced that I owe all this to Original Silicea Balsam. It is the best thing that has happened to me in the past years. My friends asked me "You're looking so relaxed and young! How on earth do you do it?" I simply tell them my secret recipe: keep a healthy diet, exercise regularly, and take a dose of Original Silicea Balsam once a day. It's my personal beauty formula!"
